After a very torrid time the controversial Timber Industry (Interim Protection) Bill 1992 was finally passed by Parliament through the strong efforts of the Reverend Fred Nile M.L.C., leader of the Call to Australia Citizens' Movement.

The thousands of Forest Workers outside Parliament House chanted "We want Fred!" "We want Fred!".

When the Reverend Fred Nile addressed the Forest Workers he received a rousing cheer from the huge crowd.

During his Speech in Parliament the Reverend Fred Nile said, "We are facing a crisis situation, an emergency situation. Under our Westminster system, the elected Government - not the Australian Democrats, the Opposition or the Independents - has to take responsibility for resolving these types of situations. If that were not so, chaos would result - we are probably close to chaos at the moment. A balancing of the various interests is needed. The Government has made a sincere attempt to do that. That attempt can always be criticised and damned by others who are negative and critical. The need for jobs and the protection of the environment must be balanced. When there are strong views on both sides, consensus and calmness are needed in trying to resolve difficulties. Less heat and more calmness and thought are needed. The amendments before the House will have to be monitored as time passes because in many ways they have been produced in a crisis environment. That is hardly the best setting in which to draft legislation".

The Reverend Fred Nile stated "The amendments are necessary because the timber industry and our nation are facing the crisis of having one million people unemployed. It is difficult to say that these amendments are not needed, that the timber industry should struggle on, and that the workers should pack up and sell their homes and go elsewhere.

They will not find work anywhere else. This is the last stop for many of the men involved in the timber industry. They have nowhere else to go if they cannot maintain their present positions. I know that in relation to these amendments the question has been asked a number of times whether the Government can prove that some jobs have been lost or how many jobs have been lost. Frankly, I have been dismayed by that. I hope that no jobs have been lost. However, I gather that some jobs have been lost and the mills are on the edge of a precipice. Unless something is done - and this legislation is an attempt to do something - the timber industry will go out backwards".

The Reverend Fred Nile spoke of the need to act otherwise towns such as Dorriggo and Bombala etc. would become ghost towns. He said "Much family disruption has been caused. I should hope it would not be necessary for all timber workers to lose their jobs before the House responded in a positive way, as it is now responding by accepting the amendments from the other place. Strong evidence has been given to me that if something was not done and the amendments were not passed, towns such as Bombala and Dorriggo, which are dependent on timber, would become virtual ghost towns".

The Reverend Fred Nile concluded in the words of the Forest Industry - "It is a sad commentary on our society when over 4,000 honest, hardworking Australians have to give up a day's work to make a point to politicians, particularly to the ALP, the Australian Democrats and the Independents".
