While the Senate has stalled the progress of the government's insidious 'anti-terror' laws, activists in Lismore will be protesting by rounding up a bunch of dubious citizens and escorting them to the Lismore police station. According to SCU law lecturer Aidan Ricketts, the definition of terrorism in the bill includes 'any politically motivated act which could create a serious risk to public health and safety', very broad indeed. Expect a future issue of The Echo to come to you from Pentridge with a free number plate inside.

And while the terror laws are stalled, the NSW Minister For Pointless Harassment, Michael Costa, is allowing random searches with sniffer dogs on trains and buses in Sydney. The regulations also cover buses and interchanges as far north as Grafton, so leave your little baggie of the Killer Weed behind when travelling.
